In sections taken through regions showing the transition toward the pithless type, an increase in the degree of lignification of the central parenchyma is seen. The fundamental tissues of this root are so closely packed with starch (Fig. 4) in all cases examined that cell walls are with difficulty made out. This necessitates the clearing of the tissues by the use of caustic potash solution. The starch grains are spheroidal or ovoidal in shape when simple, usually showing a central or nearly central hilum. In the larger grains, distinct fissures are to be seen, often of unusual dimensions. Layers are hardly discernible without special treatment. Very often the grains are aggregated, forming compounds of two, three or four parts. They are united along their flattened sides, and form two-, three- or four-lobed aggregations (Fig. 4). The fibro-vascular bundles (Fig. 5) offer some...

Reviews

An exceptional pdf and the typeface utilized was fascinating to read through. It can be written in straightforward words and phrases instead of confusing. I am just quickly could possibly get a delight of looking at a written ebook.

-- Prof. Arlie Bogan

It is in a single of the best book. This is for those who state there had not been a well worth reading through. Once you begin to read the book, it is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding.
