Excerpt: .as clear as a bell; and she warbles with the facility of a nightingale. Whilst her execution is of the most brilliant kind, nothing can approach the exquisite propriety and aptness of her cadenzai; they always come in at the happy moment; she never sacrifices sense to sound. Her simplicity of style is, indeed, most rigid; but this charming naturalness it is which goes so home to the hearts of her hearers. Her trill is perfect--truly marvellous--proving that she must have an intuitive knowledge of her art, as well as the beat culture. Her style is full of impulse; or, as the French have it, of abandon. In the absence of all stage trickery, or conventionalism, may be distinguished this child of genius. Her opening cavatina in the presence of Amina's friends and her finale are contrasted with the highest skill. In the...
