Excerpt: . . . 11 However, protection of high-value individual trees remains a valid option, and I have some talking points that were developed by Forest Health Protection, describing some of the insecticides that can be used in protecting high-value trees. The removal of dead trees and other fire fuels have been shown to reduce fire risk in the immediate vicinity of a home or a structure, and is advisable under most circumstances. At the larger regional scale, however, the influence of bark beetle outbreaks on fuel dynamics and fuel behavior is less clear. We know its a very complicated and dynamic process and can vary greatly, depending on many factors, including pre-outbreak stand conditions, and most importantly, weather. Climate will continue to change, and its imperative that we design restoration plans that take into account the effects of new climate on our existing - the organisms that exist in our current eco-systems, including the conifers and the insects. As temperature continues to increase, mountain pine beetle survival and reproductive capacity will also increase, but only to a point. Our research suggests that unless this insect is capable of rapidly adapting to increasing temperatures, many populations may go locally extinct. This is because of this evolved tight synchrony between the beetle developmental timing, and temperature that I mentioned earlier, that facilitates this mass attack strategy. This could be disrupted as temperatures continue to warm. To make informed decisions regarding restoration of currently impacted forests, as well as beetle population spread, an understanding of how continued warming will affect mountain pine beetle success is also needed....
